

Real winners

By Jim McCabe, Boston Globe Staff | February 14, 2008 | Golf Notes

There was the PGA Tour playoff atmosphere on Labor Day at TPC Boston in Norton, but months later, Deutsche Bank Championship officials have a clear picture of the true payoff: $3.3 million raised for charity. "We're extremely gratified to achieve another record year of support for our local communities," said Deutsche Bank CEO Seth Waugh, who has overseen the event since it debuted in 2003. In those five years, the championship has raised more than $10 million for charities such as the Tiger Woods Learning Center, the Stop & Shop Family Foundation, and Camp Harbor View.